

Afar

BY: ALEXA PACHOLYK

Our lives have changed.

An invisible wall divides us from our neighbors.

We are connected, yet it's like we are a thousand miles apart.

An endless sea of face masks floods our world, that we can't seem to swim past.

We isolate for weeks on end, not knowing when this shall end.

We work from afar and meet virtually, to share our thoughts and smiles.

The world will change, but our spirits are bright, for the sun returns each day.

We will gather again, although not the same, just simply, a bit afar.
